
can you believe we did it?

Posted by Nic - 2006/01/28 01:32

a little drunk on the moment as the front door finally opens.
I doubt I'll get a drink round here right now, and it looks like I'm the only man in this strange pub.
talking to myself.
well I'll hang around, maybe someone will turn up.
n

Re:can you believe we did it?

Posted by James MacGregor - 2006/01/30 09:12

Well I might have known I would find you in here Nic!
No home to go to then, or just winding down after a couple of really fraught weeks putting Netribution to bed....

Well, it's done now and we'll only know how it has gone down when we start getting some feedback from readers.
They've got plenty to digest, that's for sure. I really liked a couple of things. Steven Applebaum's interview with Emma Thompson was really good. I've always liked her work, never missed one of her early appearances on the small screen in Tutti Frutti opposite Robbie Coltraine where she played a great rock chick - mind for TV that was a bit of an all star cast. Wonder why they never repeated it? Repeat fees too much I suppose.

Anyway, what I liked about the interview was her frankness and the fact that for a high profile performer, she's not the least afraid of expressing political and social concerns. I mean she's an intelligent woman so why not, but it always comes as a surprise hearing performers who are so committed. Funny innit?

Nice cold Becks please. Thanks Nic.

JMcG

Re:can you believe we did it?

Posted by James MacGregor - 2006/01/30 09:13

Well I might have known I would find you in here Nic!
No home to go to then, or just winding down after a couple of really fraught weeks putting Netribution to bed....

Well, it's done now and we'll only know how it has gone down when we start getting some feedback from readers.
They've got plenty to digest, that's for sure. I really liked a couple of things. Steven Applebaum's interview with Emma Thompson was really good. I've always liked her work, never missed one of her early appearances on the small screen in Tutti Frutti opposite Robbie Coltraine where she played a great rock chick - mind for TV that was a bit of an all star cast. Wonder why they never repeated it? Repeat fees too much I suppose.

Anyway, what I liked about the interview was her frankness and the fact that for a high profile performer, she's not the least afraid of expressing political and social concerns. I mean she's an intelligent woman so why not, but it always comes as a surprise hearing performers who are so committed. Funny innit?

Nice cold Becks please. Thanks Nic.

JMcG

Re:can you believe we did it?

Posted by i don't like this posting title - 2006/03/18 22:01

having a look around the site.. there's a few things more to add, such as an image rotator for the top spot, registration and profile settings, the about netribution section.. but looking around, it seems to work alright actually. credit of course to every writer who has taken the time to learn the not overwhelmingly simple content management system to create some great articles with some often fantastic accompanying images.

congratulations and thanks for the concerted effort.

nic
watch the skis

=====